What is SAP SD?

SAP SD, short for Sales and Distribution, is a critical component of the SAP ERP system utilized to manage an organization's shipping, billing, selling, and transportation of products and services. As one of the best modules in the market, SAP SD plays a pivotal role in maintaining customer relationships from quotation through sales order and billing of goods or services.

In Technical Terms:

SAP SD, or SAP Sales and Distribution, is an integral module within the SAP ERP system, dedicated to managing various aspects of sales processes and distribution channels. It encompasses functionalities such as order-to-cash processes, pricing, credit management, and delivery processing, ensuring seamless execution of sales orders from initial customer inquiry to order fulfillment and invoicing.

The module utilizes essential master data such as customer and material records to streamline order processing efficiently. It employs advanced functionalities like the condition technique and pricing procedures to accurately calculate prices based on customer-specific conditions and agreements. Additionally, SAP SD seamlessly integrates with other modules such as Inventory Management (IM), Materials Management (MM), and Financial Accounting (FI) to ensure comprehensive business processes.

By integrating with Customer Relationship Management (CRM), SAP SD enhances customer service by providing a 360-degree view of customer interactions and history. It supports various sales channels, including e-commerce and Electronic Data Interchange (EDI), ensuring a consistent customer experience across all touch points. Furthermore, SAP SD contributes to effective demand planning, order fulfilment, and revenue management, making it a crucial component of an organisation's overall business operations.
